► INTRODUCTION

Since 1998, all international medical graduates (IMGs) have been required to pass a clinical skills exam known as the Clinical Skills Assessment, or CSA—a test involving clinical encounters with “standardized patients”—as a prerequisite to entering residency training in the United States. With the introduction of the USMLE Step 2 Clinical Skills (CS), however, U.S. and Canadian medical students as well as IMGs are now required to demonstrate basic clinical competencies in order to enter residency training and take the Step 3 exam.

Even if you are a seasoned pro at taking standardized exams such as the USMLE Step 1 and Step 2 Clinical Knowledge (CK), you may find it challenging to prepare for the USMLE Step 2 CS—which, like the CSA it has replaced, uses live patient actors to simulate clinical encounters. Common mistakes students and IMGs make in preparing for the Step 2 CS include the following:

- Panicking because of the unfamiliar format
- Inadequate practice with mock patient scenarios prior to the actual exam
- Not developing a logical plan of attack based on patient “doorway information”
- Not understanding the required objectives for each patient encounter
- Poor time management during patient encounters
- Becoming flustered by challenging questions or situations
- Taking unfocused histories and physical exams
- Failing to understand how to interact with a patient appropriately
- Not performing easy but required patient interactions

This book will help guide you through the process of efficiently preparing for and taking the Step 2 CS with four organized sections:

- Section I introduces you to the USMLE Step 2 CS.
- Section II reviews critical, high-yield steps to take during the patient encounter.
- Section III provides high-yield mimickers for common doorway chief complaints to help you rapidly develop focused differentials during the exam.
- Section IV has full-length practice cases to help you simulate the real thing.

► USMLE STEP 2 CS—THE BASICS

What is the USMLE Step 2 CS?

The United States Medical Licensing Examination (USMLE) Step 2 CS is a one-day exam whose objective is to ensure that all U.S. and Canadian medical students seeking to obtain their medical licenses—as well as all IMGs seeking to start their residencies in the United States—have the communication, interpersonal, and clinical skills necessary to achieve these goals. To pass
